

Very often, I see people taking a lot of pain to implement Vaastu and then make Vaastu blunders that can easily be avoided. Also, I have noticed that many people feel that they cannot implement Vaastu seriously, abandoning the implementation altogether. This is very sad and this practice should not be followed. Whatever Vaastu can be implemented, must be implemented. Even a small Vaastu implementation can go a long way.

In this series, "Dr Ravi Rao's Vaastu Tips", I shall give simple tips that can be of great help in the house, office and even in factories. I hope readers will start implementing what they read.

Kitchen

Nowadays multiple burners for the gas stove are in vogue and so I add a word of caution. The house' kitchen stove should NOT have three burners. It is considered inauspicious. You can have two or four or multiples of two for the better health of the family.

While cooking the person should face east or north or west but never south.

Main Door

When you open the main door of the house – you should NOT see any Toilet or its door from the main entry of the house. Also you should NOT see brooms or any cleaning agents like Dettol , brooms etc from the Main gate while going out of the house from the main door. One should not see these things while going out of the house as seeing them may delay the work or procrastinate the proceedings in day-to-day life.

Similarly while entering in to office premises or work places, if cleaning is going on it is considered inauspicious. The cleaning is important but it should be done well in advance before the key people come to the work place.

The main door of the house should be bigger- thicker-stronger-taller-wider than the rest of the doors. The main door is called the Simhadwaar. This will ensure respect and status of the house lord. If this principle is not followed, it will take away the name and fame that the family enjoys.

The main door can either be the biggest single door or it can have two doors that together add up to the largest-sized door of the house. The door can be made of metal or wood or any other material as per the location of the house. The point is that the bigger the main door is, the better it is for the family.

Unfortunately, to save cost, modern construction practices avoid installing a big main door. ■
